

Mollie Rimmell

Engineer, Lowestoft Depot

“

I wanted to do something different growing up, so engineering really ticked all the boxes for me. Every day is different with new challenges. I am the late engineer, so anything that crops up throughout the day, I get to fix so the bus is ready to go back out the following day for our customers. I really like the shock factor that the general public or even some colleagues get when I show up out on the road, tools in hand, to fix the bus and send them back on their way!

My advice to any other women considering a career in the bus industry would be to just be yourself and believe you have what it takes and don't be afraid to reach for the stars. I have never worked anywhere as supportive as the team I work with now; I just know they always have my back. It's a great feeling! I am really proud to be someone that other women can look up to.
